Inkaterra has announced its new addition, the Inkaterra Hacienda Urubamba of the Sacred Valley, located 2,900 meters above sea level and nestled between Cusco and Machu Picchu.

The hotel offers what any weary traveler searches for related to complete tranquility in isolation, or even a spiritual transformation brought on by the natural beauty of the Sacred Valley of the Incas, or the satisfaction that comes from picking your own fresh artichokes from their organic plantation.

Not one of the 12 rooms of the hotel is without a stunning view of the surrounding Andean countryside. Mountains, green pastures, flowers, roaming llamas, and the entire panoramic of the Sacred Valley is its playground. If that won't impress, the interior was designed by Denise Guislain with pre-Colombian textiles and local taste in collaboration with her husband, founder and CEO of Inkaterra, José Koechlin.

The hotel is ornate, with a rustic flavor that compliments the local culture.

The organic farm covers four acres of land surrounding the property where guests are welcomed to harvest quinoa of varieties red, black, and brown; artichoke, natural Urubamba giant corn, purple corn, potatoes, onions, beans, and broccoli. Each product has been planted and harvested utilizing ancient techniques, native to the Sacred Valley.

As for activities, the valley is home to over 30 bird species; a bird-lover's paradise. If one is looking to exert more energy, the region offers eco-adventure sports such as hiking, horseback riding, mountain biking, and river rafting.
