Let the train take the strain

There are a number of difficult hiking trails to reach Machu Picchu, but those in the know catch the Belmond Hiram Bingham, named after the explorer who rediscovered the ruins in 1911. This enchanting luxury train whisks passengers through Peru's verdant landscapes, pisco sour in hand, to reach the cloud-shrouded citadel. For a longer stay, check in to one of Inkaterria's whitewashed casitas tucked away in the forest that is home to 214 bird species and the world's largest native orchid collection.

In awe of the aurora

Sightings of the elusive Northern Lights are commonplace at Deplar Farm in far-flung Iceland. Heli-skiing is a popular activity, and summer days are so long here that enthusiasts can take to the slopes for up to 10 hours.
