Inkaterra Hacienda Urubamba Sacred Valley

By night the hotel glitters like a bejewelled casket on the hillside. Perched in the embrace of the imperial Andes, this tranquil temple is among Peru's loveliest hotels. The main building, behind which casitas rise on the lilt of the hill, recreates a Spanish hacienda enclosing a central courtyard. Breakfasts seduce, but for gourmet suppers drive out to Sol y Luna.

Inkaterra Machu Picchu Pueblo Hotel Aguas Calientes

Inkaterra's flagship hotel river-set by the Aguas Calientes train station has large cottages nestled across a verdant winding incline. Noisy trains don't trouble when the river thunders louder and stone walls keep out sound. Besides, the cloud forest cocoons. Beautiful setting. Pity about the robotic service. On twilight walks you're told of quirky Inca beliefs and rituals (including sacrifices) still upheld by locals. Supper on the restaurant hanging over the river is nicely quaint. But best is breakfast to the serenade of the river and views of thickly forested hills kissing the heavens.
