

BRUMMELL

Winter 2019

The little black book for the City

Helping hand

Modern philanthropy • Giving the green light to eco start-ups • Luxury accessories to up your game
Football heroes aid refugees • Aston Martin gears up • Hands across the oceans: horological help

↑ TRAVELLING RIGHT

Founded in 1975, Inkaterra Hotels encompasses six eco-luxury lodges and hotels in Peru. NGO Inkaterra Asociación operates research projects across the country that focus on conservation and preserving local cultures and communities. A stay at any one of its hotels funds these projects, making it an ideal choice for travellers keen to make a positive impact. One of Inkaterra's most recent sustainable initiatives was the implementation of an organic waste treatment plant at Inkaterra Machu Picchu Pueblo Hotel, which has led to Machu Picchu Pueblo (also known as Aguas Calientes) to become the first city in Latin America to recycle 100 per cent of its solid waste. The plant processes several tonnes of waste every day, generating a natural fertiliser

↑ ECO CHIC

House of Fluff uses Earth-friendly materials to create luxury faux fur outerwear that is as warm as it is sophisticated. Stylist and creative director, Kym Canter sold 26 of her own animal fur coats to establish House of Fluff in New York in 2017, as a womenswear brand that does not harm animals or have any negative impact on the environment. The brand is actively partnering with scientists to develop compostable bio-based faux fur textiles. A new addition to the collection is a faux fur shearling made from 100 per cent recycled post-consumer waste. From $125 (£97); houseoffluff.com