“This award honors fifty years of commitment to excellence, authenticity, and the preservation of Peru’s living cultural and natural heritage,” explains José Koechlin von Stein, founder and president of Inkaterra. “Receiving five Michelin Keys confirms that hospitality can be not only an expression of beauty, quality, and service, but also an act of conservation.”

Since its founding 50 years ago, Inkaterra has stood for regenerative and scientifically sound ecotourism. The company operates sustainable luxury accommodations in various regions of Peru and combines hospitality with research, nature conservation, and community work.

With the Michelin Keys, awarded for the first time, the Michelin Guide expands its well-known rating system – inspired by the famous Michelin stars – and sets a new international standard for exceptional hotel experiences.
