Where to stay in Aguas Calientes

Rockrivers MachuPicchu – this is where I stayed in Aguas Calientes. It's a great, new hotel with very comfortable rooms, just steps away from the train station. Keep in mind though, that if you book any of the rooms with balconies, the train track is right outside of your window. It did get noisy, so if you are a light sleeper either bring ear plugs or opt for a room in the back of the building. Breakfast is included in the rate and starts at 5.30 am, which is great if you have the 7 am Machu Picchu tickets and need to catch one of the early buses. Ponchos restaurant is downstairs and guests of the hotel get a 10% discount.

Inkaterra Machu Picchu Pueblo Hotel – this is one of the nicest hotels in Peru. It's set in cloud forest with beautiful lush gardens, waterfalls and many opportunities to spot wildlife. They offer all kinds of activities like bird watching, guided nature walks and tea making. It feels hidden away, but the train station and bus to Machu Picchu are within a short walking distance.
